Radiologic Features of Pancreatic Cholangiocarcinoma: Can Radiologists Interpret Them? To determine the radiologic features of pancreatic cholangiocarcinoma (PCC) and to analyze the performance of radiologists to correctly identify PCC and differentiate PCC from chronic pancreatitis (CP) on both CT and magnetic resonance (MR) imaging. A retrospective review of both CT and MR imaging of 100 cases of pathologically confirmed PCC, 87 cases of pathologically confirmed CP, and 120 cases of pathologically confirmed inflammatory pancreatic masses was conducted. Two radiologists independently reviewed the imaging studies and recorded the presence of 8 signs of PCC that had been described in the literature. Interobserver agreement was calculated. The 8 signs of PCC were present in 95% of PCC cases, while inflammatory pancreatic masses had significantly fewer of these signs (45%, p
